

of party fights in the district for years to overthrow their decision at the polls.

This was, however, of no avail. The State Committee evidently determined that its investigating committee had made a careful and impartial examination, and that it had acted for the good of the party in making its report nullifying the results of the August primary.

The committee was late in gathering, and it was a week before Chairman Elyson called it to order. The hall was a number of prominent Virginia Democrats, drawn to the meeting by the importance of the matter under discussion. These included: Senator J. D. Elyson, of Brunswick; Colonel George Wayne Anderson, of Richmond; Assistant Attorney-General W. E. Bibb, of Loudoun; James R. Jordan, of Isle of Wight; Senator George B. Keene, of Rockingham; State Fish Commissioner W. McDonald Lee, of Lancaster; S. H. Love, of Lunenburg; Senator E. E. Holland, of Suffolk; Senators E. C. Folkes and A. C. Harman, of Richmond; and S. B. Barham, Jr., of Surry.

Twenty-five members answered to their names when the roll was called, and three others came in later. Chairman Elyson at once called for the report of the investigating committee, which was read by Chairman R. A. McIntire, and which is printed elsewhere.

Close attention was paid throughout to the reading of the report. Especially was this the case when Major McIntire stated that "unwarranted misstatements by some subcommittee members and the public mind with an impression as to the contents of the registration books of Norfolk county which was read by Chairman R. A. McIntire, and which is printed elsewhere."

The climax came unexpectedly, as it was rather abrupt, in the announcement that the committee recommended that the primary be declared null and void, there was a great outburst, and Mr. Maynard drew down the corners of his mouth in a manner which betokened his satisfaction.

Mr. McCallister, of Bath, moved that each side be given fifteen minutes for argument. General W. W. Sale, who had been the first to speak, he thought the contestant and contestee should have reasonable time.

Chairman Elyson suggested one hour to a side, whereupon General Sale put this in the form of a motion. Mr. McCallister still desired to avoid long talking, was willing to agree to half an hour, but the committee agreed to the motion by a vote of twenty-two to four.

T. J. Wool opened the debate for Mr. Maynard. He testified to the faithful work of the investigating committee, and said that it would be impossible to agree that any certain number of votes were cast for Mr. Young and a certain number of Mr. Maynard. Mr. Wool declared that he had never attempted to prevent any one from testifying, that he was anxious to get the truth out, and let the chips fall where they might. Even had the committee recommended that the primary be declared null and void, he would have accepted it because it would have been tainted with fraud. He was willing to accept the report of the committee.

For Mr. Young, T. J. Green went into the evidence of the investigation in detail. He said that four precincts were actually involved. In the Second Precinct of the Second Ward of Norfolk, eleven men who were recorded as voting testified that they did not vote, and eight men said eight others had voted for them. Twenty-six and eight men were recorded as having voted for Maynard, while only nineteen votes were returned for him. The result of the ballots, twenty-nine Maynard votes were discovered.

Norfolk, he argued, was a cosmopolitan place, and its most cosmopolitan ward. He was gratified to find that only nineteen repeaters had been returned. He did not think the judges could be tainted with fraud because of nineteen votes of 618. He inquired if it were reasonable to think that judges who intended fraud would have twenty-nine votes in the box and certify to only nineteen.

Mr. Green was willing to throw out Hall's Corner Precinct, in Norfolk county, where irregularities had been shown. Here ninety-three votes were returned for Young, and eighteen for Maynard. "Let her go," he said.

In Portsmouth, he contended, conditions were different. Here the fraud was actual and palpable. There was no question about it. Of the 3,852 votes cast in Norfolk, twenty-two votes, or thirty-two votes at most, had been successfully secured. He called this a pretty clean bill of health. If all four precincts affected were thrown out, Young still had a majority in the district. The whole of wrong impressions which had gone out from published reports. Alleged repeat men had been proved to have appeared, but the public still believed that they had been returned as voting. Common justice, he argued in conclusion, demanded that the State should have certificates and another man wanted it, should say in this case that it should say where it was.

The citizens' committee here asked for and got thirty minutes. The speakers went into the discussion without minor interruptions, with an abandon which bespoke their earnestness. E. A. Bilsby charged that Young's counsel had thrown every obstacle in the way of the investigation.

He remarked that the goddess of Democracy had had her clothing removed and had been debauched by "the worst bunch of politicians that the State had ever known." He asked if it were not true that all the party troubles in recent years had come from the Democratic side.

the two cities and county will be enormous.

Line of Procedure.
The first indication of the line of procedure was given today in an order, signed by Mr. Tilton, and directed to the clerk of the Corporation Court, asking that a list of names given by the voters of the Second Ward, before the grand jury October 17. This list of names turned out to be the voters of the Second Ward. The case is marked John Doe, et al. While eminent Virginians have given opinions to the effect that there are no election laws in Virginia reaching violations in unregulated primary elections, the application of the general laws to primary elections is provided under section 122 "O" of the Code have never been tested, and it is declared that the test will not be made.

Back to Police Justice.
Each and every violation, if any, that has occurred here being a misdemeanor, every indictment that the grand jury in Norfolk should find will have to be certified back to Police Justice James P. Duncan for trial. Every indictment that might be returned by the Norfolk county grand jury would have to be certified back to the Police Justice for trial. The material district in which the alleged county violation of law occurred. Upon conviction appeal could be taken by defendants to the Corporation Court in Norfolk, the House of Burgesses in Portsmouth, and the Circuit Court in Norfolk county, with trial in these respective courts either by jury or the presiding judge. Upon acquittal in the magistrate's court the State would be without appeal, and this would end the proceedings.

Pass on Legality.
Upon the finding of any indictment in Norfolk by the grand jury under the probe now in progress this indictment would go at once to Justice Duncan, and it would become his duty to pass upon the legality of the law if this question were raised by accused parties.
